

VISIBLE THINKING

July 18, 2016

GRREC Office and Training Facility • 230 Technology Way • Bowling Green, KY

GRREC is pleased to offer Making Thinking Visible with Thinking Routines. This is a professional learning experience based on the research project of Harvard University's Project Zero and the work of Ron Ritchhart, Mark Church and Karin Morrison.

As teachers we want our learners to realize early on the value and importance of their thinking. Thinking Routines are used regularly to help make students' thinking visible and as tools and structures for deepening students' understanding. However, the real power of thinking routines comes from using them to establish patterns of thinking.

GRREC, RTTD Cognitive
Coach, Shanan Mills

GRREC, Director of Instructional Technology

Join GRREC's own Shanan Mills and Terri Stice for a great day of learning about our thinking, while collaborating and networking with educators from across the GRREC region.

This is an interactive hands-on workshop.

Please bring your own laptop.

Participants Will:

- Practice using thinking routines as a learner
- Reflect upon how thinking routines might be used across many contexts
- Beyond thinking routines, we'll also examine other areas in teachers' practice, namely engaging opportunities for thinking and learning to adapt and thrive in today's learning environment.
